HONORING A BANKER.

WALTER CUNLIFFE, governor of the Bank of England, has been elevated to the peerage in recognition of his distinguished service during the financial crisis which followed the outbreak of war. The work performed by the Bank of England under his direction is regarded in banking circles as the most remarkable financial transaction ever brought to a successful issue. With the co-operation of the British government the bank assumed the whole burden of rediscounting and carrying acceptances, and its loan account rose at once to hitherto unheard of proportions.

The reserves at once shrank in the same proportion, but the bank was able to draw gold "out of the ground," and now has in its vaults about three hundred and fifty million dollars of the precious metal, or almost twice its average holdings in normal times. Much of this increase has been drawn from the United States and more will follow, through the rapid growth of our exports and of the balance of trade in our favor is reducing the demand for gold in New York. The world's great bankers could not make good their boast that they could prevent war, but the governor of the Bank of England has earned his reward in assisting his country in war quite as effectively as the best soldier in the field.

QUARANTINING THE EAST.

THIS is the time when Nevada must take a firm stand against encroachments of diseased stock by firmly enforcing the quarantine declared this week. It is of vital importance to a sparsely settled state like Nevada that the dreaded plague should not get a foothold. Should the germs be scattered on the lonely ranges of the state the dissemination would depopulate the cattle country and deprive the state of its chief industry. Cattle growing ranks even mining as the first industry of Nevada and too great caution cannot be exercised in protecting the rights of the cattlemen from the hazards of infection. The isolation of Nevada may work a temporary hardship to the stock interests who have contracts to fill for delivery, but it will also insure eventually to a greater prosperity of the industry. With the ravages recently reported from the east it is not difficult to perceive the time coming when steaks will appear only on the tables of the rich and that even "canned corn" will be a luxury not to be despised.

THE DANGER IN EGG PRICES.

A REPRESENTATIVE of the British government the other day arranged to buy all the available eggs in storage in Chicago and he made an initial purchase of $9,000 dozen. It is to be expected that if we are to supply our fighting neighbors with eggs there will be a further advance in the price of our favorite breakfast food and that there will be much irritation in consequence. We understand perfectly well why it is that an advance in the price of eggs produces such irritation that grand juries and the prosecuting machinery of the various commonwealths are called in to punish somebody no matter who.

We view with a considerable degree of calmness an additional war tax, we see some of our representatives in congress grabbing the available revenues of the government in excessive appropriations with philosophy, we dig for higher prices in beef, lamb and other meats. Announce an advance in the price of eggs and the people with unanimity call for vengeance. This is so because breakfast is a trial and the average man cannot achieve to good humor until he has absorbed his morning egg.

The statistician is getting in his deadly work with the figures submitted from the firing lines of the several armies, with the result that we are told the estimates of losses to date are apocryphal. An officer of the intelligence bureau of the United States army, for instance, cites the recent statement of an expert to the effect that the Germans have lost 1,250,000 men to date. The comment is that, at this rate, the war will end within six months for want of men to shoot, as the whole German army aggregates 5,000,000 men.

The commissioners of the several counties will have to resort to certified accountants to find where they stand with their tax rolls when they come to make additions, reductions and subtractions to bring the state assessed valuation up to the expectations of the gentlemen at Carson City.

Boris Thomassen, an I. W. W., has confessed to firing a theater in Tonopah, the blaze destroying sixteen dwellings in addition to the place of amusement. Boris is now in line for a presidential nomination at the hands of his party.—Oakland Tribune.

With a protective tariff this country would be at the high tide of prosperity, owing to the number of factories and new industries seeking an opening which they cannot grasp while the uncertainty of a free trade administration exists.

It will surprise many to learn that within 200 miles of Tonopah, within the boundaries of Nevada, watermelons, tomatoes and cantaloupes are ripening in the semi-tropical belt of the state, which has been neglected too long.

What has become of the A. B. C. peace mediators? It appears there is a good chance for the members to do business right now if they want to butt in between Villa and Carranza.

The only woman candidate on the state ticket in Kansas, where the women vote, ran third, which again prompts the question, "What's the matter with Kansas?"

Note the gentlemanly repression with which one ex-president has resisted the temptation to gloat over what happened to another ex-president on election day.

ELY RAILROAD MAN DROPS OFF ENGINE

FORMER CONDUCTOR ON NEVADA NORTHERN MEETS UNTIMELY END.

J. W. Caskey, formerly conductor on the Nevada Northern, met his death at McGill early Thursday morning by falling from a switch engine in the smelter end, says the White Pine News. It is the belief of physicians that the deceased was suffering from an attack of dizziness, when he took the fatal plunge. Al Rose, engineer on the dailies, was watching Caskey, before the accident occurred, and declares that he uttered the expression "Whoa" before he toppled over.

Rose demonstrated that he was a hero in such an emergency. He applied the emergency brakes without delay and the train was stopped almost instantly. One side of the brakes was torn off during the process. He discovered that Caskey was not under the wheels.

Caskey was struck across the right thigh, and that member was almost completely severed from the body, and the left thigh was badly lacerated. At this stage of the proceedings Caskey was still conscious, and said to Rose: "Pull ahead, Al, I'll get out."

The injured man was removed to the emergency hospital within a short time. The party rested several times along the journey in the hope that beneficial results would follow. Caskey died before the hospital was reached.
